Drupada, her father, intended to wed Draupadi to Arjuna, who had previously defeated him in a battle.

Upon hearing of the Pandavas' supposed death at Varanavata, he set up a Swayamvar contest for Draupadi to choose her husband from the competitive contest. The test was to lift and string a bow, and fire arrows to pierce the eye of a golden fish only by looking at its reflection in the water. At the Swayamvar, almost all the assorted monarchs were unable to complete the challenge. There are some variations regarding Karna's participation. Some renditions show Draupadi refusing to marry Karna on account of him being a Suta. In the end, Arjuna succeeded in the task, dressed as a Brahmin.
